Market Review

The first quarter is behind us and we can fairly state that it was a rather smooth ride. We saw new record highs, strong macro-economic numbers, M&A activity and even rumors about QE tapering in Europe. The American economy is expanding path with the latest strong consumer confidence data being a good indicator. As expected, the Federal Reserve has raised interest rates. While some panic was felt after the failed health care reform and Trump's credibility getting beaten down, the US equity market remained flat for the month as investors kept faith in the Trumponomics's reflation trade. Conversely, European equities were propelled higher as strong macro-economic data eclipsed political risks. The Eurostoxx 600 gained 2.94% in March with the periphery clearly outperforming. The fixed income market was particularly sensitive as interest rates increased for all countries and across the yield curve. The market went as far as to start speculating on the ECB's exit strategy from the highly loose monetary policy. Consequently, the Citi Euro Investment Grade Bond index lost 0.52% in March. Even High Yield bonds corrected in March with the iBoxx High Yield index losing 0.18%. In the currencies market, the US dollar experienced a slight drop during the month amid Trump's setback and worries that he might not be able to deliver as fast as hoped. Oil was also quite volatile as American shale producers continued to pump faster. Investors' doubts about OPEC's ability to control prices has pushed the WTI 6.3% lower in March.

Portfolio Performance

The fund was down 0.14% during the month. Equities had a positive contribution to the overall performance mainly thanks to European and Emerging Markets stocks. On the other hand, the rise in interest rates had a negative impact on the fixed income part of the portfolio. Finally, currencies had a negative contribution to the performance as well mainly because of the US dollar which depreciated 0.74% in March.

During the month, we have reduced the overall exposure to the US dollar from 30% to 25% amid Trump's political setbacks. On the equity side, we had already reduced equity exposure last month after a strong start of the year and we kept overall exposure around 44% in March, below the 50% maximum threshold.

On the Fixed income part of the portfolio, we have again reduced our duration bringing it down to 3.9 towards the end of the month.

Market Outlook

So what can we expect in the second quarter? While there is still a lot of unknowns surrounding Trump's future policy success, one thing is sure: markets will remain highly sensitive to that topic. The European political scene will also be active with the upcoming French presidential elections. Bottom line is, the second quarter will be loaded in events and markets could get wobbly after a strong first quarter. We acknowledge this and have already slightly reduced the risk profile of the portfolio. However, given the strong macro-economic background and further cycle synchronization across the globe we remain overall constructive on risky assets and see any Q2 correction as an opportunity to increase exposure again.
