Market Review

Publication of the first estimate for US Q1 GDP confirmed growth soft patch is now history. GDP growth indeed settled at 3,2%, despite the government shutdown and Q4 2018 markets turmoil, well above consensus. This confirmation is also reflected in the earnings release from US companies for Q1 that has so far delivered above expectations globally. EPS forecasts for 2019 have stopped deteriorating.

Global growth is thus recovering, also driven by China that started to feel the effects of recent pro-cyclical measures. This should prove supportive for the rest of the world, incidentally for Asia but also for Europe, whose growth is also linked to Chinese ups-and-downs.

Encouraging momentum, confirming previous green shoots, stemming out of the two economic giants (pending a trade deal is found) translated into a much better environment for investments than initially feared. Risk assets prices rose back to their previous highs (even above as for example with the S&P500 index).

These well-oriented economic developments are also supported by still dovish central banks, with at the forefront the US Federal Reserve that can afford the luxury to remain “on hold” (meaning no further rate hikes) as long as inflation data disappoints.

Portfolio Performance

During the month, the Fund gained 1.4% coming mainly from the equity part of the portfolio. During the month, we have increased our global equity exposure to 45% as a result of bottom-up stock selection. We have indeed identified some specific opportunities during the reporting season where we still see significant upside.

With the US dollar steady around 1.12, the currencies in the portfolio didn't impact performance this month.

In the fixed income part of the portfolio, the contribution was slightly positive despite interest rates rebounding somewhat as this was offset by still contracting credit spreads.

Market Outlook

All in all, economic momentum points to a better second half of the year from an economic perspective and should prove a positive ground for investments. Of course, there is no room for error, for instance in the US-China negotiations. As such, we maintain a decent exposure to equities with a tilt towards developed equities and long term thematics. Parallely, we still keep duration in the bonds portfolio above 5 and some Japanese Yen exposure as protection.
